BARGAIN STORES,

THE SHIRTS FOR SIGHS.

BY W. O. S.

One more unfortunate dasping for breath. Rashly unfortunate Choking to death.

The form, it was manly.
The shirts they were fine.
But mark you how mournfully
lie doth repine.
To look at the sit of them.
Setting so rudely.
Just notice the fit of them.
Fashioned so crudely.

Fashioned so crudely.
And then to just think of them,
Don't speak it profamely.
The cut and the shape of them
Was truly unseemly.
If he had purchased them
From one whose renown
For making the best of them
Is heard thro'the town.

He would never have fretted O'er such a sad fate.

The general public doesn't care whether you make your own goods, or pay Smith or Brown for making them for you; they don't care if you are the Original and Only One Price Clothier, or if Adam, or Eve, or Methuselah was; they don't care if your store is 7x9 feet in size, or if you have branches in all the known quarters of the globe, and in Yellow Springs, besides; but if the public can be well treated by honest people; if they can buy their Clothing at lower prices from one firm than they can from another; if they find an enterprising concern which caters for their business and takes care of it when they get it, they are as sure to take their patronage there as the needle is to point to the north star.

We have been in the business here but about a year; in that time our business has trebled, our circle of friends widely increased, and our store room become far too small for us.
